TI - Population and Development in Egypt :

AB - The future course of remittance from the Egyptians working abroad, however, is hard to chart, because it is affected always by any political events in the area of the Middle East. In 1978 these remittances.

totalled $1.7 billion, while it is increased to about $3.5 billion in or to plan for specific sums, Egypt can be reasonably confident that its emigrant workers will be a major foreign exchange contributor at least through the rest of this decade.

In sum, it is clear that the overall prospects for Egypt are immeasurably better than they were only as recently as two years ago, and there- seems to be a genuine new determination to face the most intractable problems of the country.

However, population growth in Egypt (2.8% per year) is the most eminent problem facing development.
