

Perceptions of geography students in the USA and Egypt on global issues

Abstract

The study aimed to compare the perceptions of Egyptian and American students on global issues. The authors developed a survey of global issues and administered it to a sample of 321 Geography students in the United States and Egypt. The survey tapped five issues: global citizenship, cultural diversity, global conflicts, nuclear arms race, and global warming. The results showed that there were significant differences in Egyptian and American students' perception of each of the global issues.
